

University Graduates

Now you have your bachelor degree, where do you go from here? Is it best to get your Master's, do another internship or enroll on the trainee program? Together, we can define what options there are with companies and institutions, followed by thorough preparation for interviews and selection processes.

There is no such thing as a wrong turn. Every step you take is just the next, bringing you closer to your goal.

Dear students and graduates:

Your studies may very well test your personal limits. The pressure of exams, bad marks or wondering if you have chosen the right subject can be highly stressful, especially in the first semesters. After getting their bachelor's, however, many graduates ask themselves whether they should study for a master's. And after the master's, they face demanding assessment centers, which may determine their entire future career. I offer practical guidance and expertise in all these situations.

Yet sometimes you may experience acute crises: disorientation, your own excessively high expectations or lack of organization chaos may even cause panic in later semesters and the desire to "drop everything". This is where targeted coaching is beneficial, in most cases, quickly helping you regain focus and clear your mind. Let us find a solution together.

*Yours sincerely,
Irene Krapp*

Coaching for university graduates ...

- Prior to interviews and selection processes
- To compile application documents, write a strong, informative CV and a persuasive cover letter
- To optimize your interview technique
- Prior to choosing the first employer
- When starting at a company or a special trainee program

Coaching for students ...

- Looking for the right master's degree course (comparing study programs)
- Interested in a study program abroad
- Wanting to change their subject
- Looking for alternatives, e.g. combined vocational training and degree program, international degree course
- Facing problems with structured work
- With exam anxiety or learning barriers

The consultation process

In the first orientation session, we work together to define your goal, the timeframe and the costs of the consultation. The follow-up appointments are based on your individual requirements.

Network of experts

In some cases, for instance international degree courses, it may be advisable to call on the expertise of colleagues with whom I have been collaborating successfully for many years.
